Faculty Lecture Series presents: Simulation in higher education

Experiential learning allows students to apply classroom theory in real-world settings. As an associate professor in the Linfield University-Good Samaritan School of Nursing, Heidi Johnston knows the benefits better than most.

At 7 p.m. Wednesday, Feb. 16, Johnston will explore how simulated and experiential learning are a vital component of education in the next installment of the Linfield University Faculty Lecture Series. The talk, titled "Simulation in Higher Education: Collaboration across academic programs," will be streamed live on the Linfield University YouTube channel.
